Hi Steve,
I will mail out a discovery packet this week.
Thanks,
Kate

Lisa:

Thanks for the follow-up. When I first reached out to you I only had the two certs that addressed Marijuana, and I figured you would have gotten all the substances from this single seizure. Last Friday I got the missing cert [REDACTED] and discovered that you were not involved in that analysis. By the time I responded to your message this morning, I had forgotten all about that distinction.

I appreciate you passing this on for me to Kate Corbett. FYI, the defendant defaulted today, so until they track him down, nothing will happen on this case. However, for the sake of the ADA who will handle this matter on that indeterminate future date when he is back in front of the court, I am still hoping Kate can forward that information. I am copying her on this.

Hi Steve,
I looked up the lab number that you wanted a discovery packet for. I'm not one of the chemists that did the analysis. Kate Corbett was the primary chemist so I gave the information to her and she is going to send you the discovery packet.

Thanks,

Lisa:

Please do. The case isn't going forward today, but it will at some point so the materials are still necessary.

Thank you.

Hi Steve,

I'm sorry that I didn't get that discovery packet out to you last week, I was on vacation and I forgot to put an away message up on my email. Do you still want me to send it out to you?

Thanks,

Lisa:

I had a summons sent to you last week regarding Commonwealth v. [REDACTED] in the Malden District Court, scheduled for 9/20.

I recognized the short notice and was working to get the trial delayed. At this point either it will be delayed by agreement, or it will be dismissed, but either way, there is no chance whatsoever that I will be attempting to have you come to Malden and testify.

Thank you. Sorry if this kind of thing causes headaches.
